sas visiting one of the city hospitals and had his attention attracted to a bright young fellow of 18 or so who had recently suffered amputation of one of his legs.

"When I was a running a railroad of who will not be suffered amputation of one of his legs.

"How did you meet with this mistortune my boy?" asked the prescher kindly. "It was all on account of Mr. Armourl" he exclaimed. Why, what in world do you mean?" "I mean," said the lad stoutly "that if hadn't been for Mr. Armour I'd be having my two legs this very minute." "But explain yourself," said the lad stoutly "that if hadn't been for Mr. Armour I'd be having my two legs this very minute." "But explain yourself," said the legyman. "Tell me exactly how it happened, and I may active the explain yourself," said the clegyman. "Tell me exactly how it happened, and I may active the explain yourself," said the clegyman. "Yes, yes" said the preacter, "I remember that excellent article distinctly. And what did you do next?" Well, "continued the boy, "he says in the piece that a fellow must rot go along in the sulks, but ought to step lively and hold his head high. I thought to myself that's pretty good advice, so when I started down town I stepped out lively and held my head high, and the first thing I knew I fell into a coal hole and broke my leg."

The clergyman was a sympathic soul, but he had also a keen sense of humor, and he leaned back and laughed until he was black in the face. Knowing how proud Mr. Armour was of the article, it struc. him as irresistibly comical that this should be its first fruit. "Rest easy my boy" he said, when he caught his breath, "and I'll see what I can do for you." Next day he called on the milliona re and pulled a long face. 'Brother Armour," he said "are you aware you have made a cripple for life out of a unfortunate young man of this city?" "What!" gasped the rich man in amazement. and the preacher proceed to tell the

Mr. Armour was by no means deficient in humor bimself, but when he heard the tale he hardly knew whether to smile or sigh. "That's pretty rough" he said at length " "I'll have to look out for the boy and see that he doesn't get into any more trouble by following my advice." He was as good as his word, and when the young fellow emerged from the hospital he set him up in

John Wicks and Don Steele came in from Dogskin yesterday. They report the mines in that camp as looking first class with althes of shipping ore in sight. The well being sunk at the camp encountered water at a depth of 61 feet. It is o good quality and quickly rose to a height of five feet. This obviates the neccessity of hauling water nineteen miles to the camp.-Reno Journal.

An engine of 8,000 horse-power, twice as big as any stationary engine in existence, is now on its way to New York. It is one of the eight engines to be installed in one room. They are to furnish electric current for operating the entire elevated railway system in New York, and will displace the 225 locomotives now in existence.

Nothing seems to bave been heard of John F. McDonnell, the leventing secretary of the Virgina City Miners Union. He was not seen in Reno or Carson after he disappeared from the Comstock, nor has he been reported as being in San Francisco. It is now thought possible that Mc-Donnell committed suicide.

A shaft has been sunk sixty feet on the coal vein, and from the bottom of the shaft a drift is in coal bottom of the shaft a drift is in coal nearly the entire distance. At first the vein is small but gradually widens as the coal body is approached until at the end the face of the drift is a solid deposit of good hard, heavy coal. A blast had recently been fired and in the drift in the same of the same of the drift is a solid deposit of good hard, heavy coal. A blast had recently been fired and in the drift in the same of t was lying a good many wheel-barrow loads of marketable coal, ranging in size from a marble to chunks two feet square by three feet in Treet to length. These chunks were too eavy to handle and had to be

The coal is being used for fuel by number of families in Elko, is burned in the stove at the shaft house and is the only fuel used in the furnace of the boiler used to run the well-boring machinery. It burns to a cinder and the heat is so intense that the door of the firebox is left open all the time.

At the time the Herald man visited the property the miners were at work running another drift to the right, at almost right angles from the first. For several feet after leaving the shaft the drift was in country formation—shale, or hard slate. Afterwards small veius or stringers of coal with a clay adherence had been cut. As the drift progressed these veins became more frequent and larger, proving that another body is being approached, and lending strength to the theory that these small stringers are radiations from the immense deposit.
